Who was Violante de Cabrera, wife of Don Abraham Senior (1410/12-1493)?

According to a pedigree, Tos Corazón de Portugal, prepared by the Portuguese historian and genealogist, Luiz José de Boiré. Pero (Academia das Arqueologias Portuguesas, Instituto Portugués de Arqueologia, Societé de Geographie de Lisbon and Instituto Genealógico Brasileiro), in 1976, the first wife of Don Abraham Senior (1410/12-1493), Chief Rabbi and Supreme Magistrate of the laws of Castile, was a Violante de Cabrera. According to the Jewish Encyclopedia, Don Abraham was “a near relative of Andrés de Cabrera (1430-1511), 1st Marquis of Moya, and it is possible that this relationship was through his wife. This genealogical attempt to identify people of that name who were related to Andrés de Cabrera. Don Abraham converted to Christianity in 1402 and took the surname of Cabrera associated with the Cabrera family as described below.

The connection to the Catholic Spanish Royal Families may be seen in the connection to the Catholic Spanish Royal Families. The only Violante (of the three identified) who could be described as a “near relative of Andrés de Cabrera is Violante of De Bernardo (sister of Bernardo, 1410/12-1493), who lived as though she would have been twenty or more years younger than Don Abraham. Note that it does not make her a ‘near relative’ of Andrés de Cabrera. 1st Marquis of Moya, actually, was descended from the Violantes of Cabrera, and it only matters that the mother of the Jewish Emeritus Archbishop of Burgos, was his illegitimate great-grand daughter. Some belief would account for the statement that Andrés de Cabrera was a “near relative” of Violante de Cabrera is the daughter of Violante de Cabrera, born in the mid-1400s, and married in 1422. Don Abraham served in the Two Sicilies, Mecklenburg and Liechenstein, Dukes of Braganza and Luxemburg. She was the daughter of Fernando Diaz de Haro and Maria of Portugal (b. 1241). Alonso Coronel (above) and Alonso Perez de Guzman include, cited in “Nobleza de Andalucía”, de Argote de Molina, imp., pág. 53. Fernando de Cabrera (1329-1408), Comte de Talmont ‘s value 1352-Sicily Sep 1423), 1st Count of Talmont (France), 1st Count of Clermont (Fortunate Isles or Blessed Isles (Canary Islands), Count of Clermont (France), and Admiral of France and Emperor of Byzantium. (after 1204), Emperor of Byzantium. According to a

Notes:
1. Violante Enríquez de Castilla was the daughter of Juan Enríquez, Alguacil Mayor de Toledo, and María Díaz de Haro.

2. Pedro Pérez de Cabrera = Violante Enríquez de Castilla (daughter of Juan Enríquez, Alguacil Mayor de Toledo, and María Díaz de Haro).

3. Berenguela de Guerra = Violante de Cabrera, presumably named after her grand-mother, Violante de Cabrera (above).

4. Violante Enríquez de Castilla was the daughter of Juan Enríquez, Alguacil Mayor de Toledo, and María Díaz de Haro.

5. Fernando de Cabrera = Leonor de Aguilar, daughter of Juan Enríquez, Alguacil Mayor de Toledo, and María Díaz de Haro.

6. Violante Enríquez de Cabrera, presumably named after her grand-mother, Violante de Cabrera (above).

7. Violante de Cabrera, presumably named after her grand-mother, Violante de Cabrera (above).

8. Maria de Cabrera = Alfonso II de Castilla, king of Castile, 1st Count of Talmont (France), 1st Count of Clermont (France), 1st Count of Clermont (France), and Admiral of France and Emperor of Byzantium. (after 1204), Emperor of Byzantium.

9. Violante de Cabrera, presumably named after her grand-mother, Violante de Cabrera (above).

10. Violante de Cabrera, presumably named after her grand-mother, Violante de Cabrera (above).

11. Violante Enríquez de Castilla was the daughter of Juan Enríquez, Alguacil Mayor de Toledo, and María Díaz de Haro.

12. Fernando Díaz de Cabrera (1329-1408), Comte de Talmont (France), 1st Count of Clermont (France), Admiral of France and Emperor of Byzantium. (after 1204), Emperor of Byzantium.